

If we don't tell our stories, others will tell them for us - and they will get them wrong.

Voices That Matter Most Project

KIND clients overcome great hardship in their journey to find safety in the United States. Through workshops, trainings, and mentorships, KIND clients learn communications skills, advocacy, and how to share their stories in a variety of ways for public education and to affect change.

KIND clients get the chance to turn their immigration stories into a source of strength, learning, and power as a force for positive change in their lives and in their communities. They learn about advocacy and the power of their own voice through training in narrative, poetry, audio and video production, art, digital engagement, and civics.

KIND clients who shared their stories at KIND's annual Gala

Artwork created by KIND client as part of her story

Sharing Stories

KIND provides training and ongoing guidance that helps Voices participants become their own advocates and to promote issues that are important to them.

Voices participants have shared their stories at KIND's Gala, graduations, with policymakers and the media, on social media and at public education events.

Voices participant learns about podcasting and radio

Youth Ambassadors

Participants can become KIND Youth Ambassadors to educate others about children who come to the United States alone, why they come, and how gaining U.S. protection has changed their lives. Youth Ambassadors are trained in public speaking and given opportunities to share their story widely.

I like coming here and working with the KIND people on my art and stories. I want to help other kids like me.

Participants in Voices Advocacy Day on their way to Capitol Hill

